Case Study #1

NCI and a Revenue-Jumpstart for Tri-anim

Situation/Opportunity

Tri-anim was at a turning point. The company's acute-care customers wanted product price breaks and standardization in their Anesthesia, Respiratory, and Critical Care Departments. Unfortunately, the GPOs and IDN-contracting units that served them didn't fully appreciate how member providers would benefit from specialty-product contracts.

Jeff Hayes, then Tri-anim's Director of Corporate Accounts, understood the mission-critical implications of this challenge. In his earlier role as a frontline Sales Rep, he'd seen dozens of mom-and-pop suppliers and manufacturer reps leveraging practitioner relationships to gouge key provider accounts on price. Jeff knew that Tri-anim's full line of specialty products could be delivered to these providers at competitive prices on a nationwide basis. He felt he owed it to them and to his employer to ensure that happened. What concerned Jeff was his team's ability to accelerate speed-to-contract. Someone was going to roll up acute-care specialty products and close the nation's biggest deals. His getting in front of the right decision-makers first and getting long-term, high-volume deals in place were essential to Tri-anim's leading the field.

That's when Jeff and Tri-anim turned to the NCI Consulting Group.

Actions

As an NCI principal, Jim was highly-regarded for his expertise in top-down, national-accounts-style selling. In more than two decades of prior work representing multiple categories of health industry stakeholders, he had earned the respect of C-level teams representing tier-one contracting authorities, provider organizations, and suppliers alike. All trusted him to identify and represent exceptional solutions to the most pressing supply-side challenges facing provider organizations.

Jim studied Jeff's situation and knew exactly what was needed: a rapid increase in contracting authorities' awareness of the specialty-product spend in member hospitals, and a unique selling proposition that was an instant lock with GPO, IDN, and RPC decision-makers.

Jim and Jeff constructed a three-step action plan. They (1) optimized providers' potential speed-to-savings by reprioritizing products for bundling and consolidation under Tri-anim contracts, emphasizing brand-name products, (2) created a methodology to quantify member-hospitals' spend in targeted specialty products, and (3) designed a tool to show instantly what could be saved by member hospitals if their contracting authorities worked with a company that was national in scope (rather than dealing with dozens of mom-and-pop shops).

Once the Tri-anim "go-national" strategy was in place, Jim presold high-volume contracting authorities on the value of meeting with Jeff, emphasizing what was in it for them and why the meetings should occur sooner versus later. With that groundwork laid, Jim provided Tri-anim with an aggressive schedule of appointments. All were C-level decision-makers in tier-one GPOs and IDNs.

Jeff quickly found himself in front of VIPs with the authority and need to sign deals. He explained the specialty-product value proposition and took care of the close. Tri-anim's national-accounts team then managed the essential backend to-do list.

Once Tri-anim's base of key accounts was established, Jeff occasionally pulled Jim back in to address the natural ebbs and flows of contract compliance and renewals. For example, if Jeff's team was experiencing unwarranted push-back from mid-level contracting administrators, Jim would help Jeff reach the true powerbrokers in the contracting organizations: the C-level decision-makers most likely to understand and appreciate Tri-anim's importance to member organizations.

Results

Jeff's leadership ability in National Accounts and Jim's VIP relationships contributed to Tri-anim's growth from $30 million to more than $350 million in annual revenues. The company became a natural target for investors and was rapidly acquired.

Today, Jeff is quick to credit Jim as a key success factor in Tri-anim's impressive growth and his own career progression. "Time is of the essence in contracting. NCI eliminated hoops for us and dramatically enhanced our speed-to-contract. That was central to our building the market share and earnings that set us ahead of the pack."

Case Study #2

NCI, Alsius, and the Fast-Track to Revenue

Situation/Opportunity

Mark Colangelo needed leverage. His employer, Alsius, was an $8 million supplier of integrated capital equipment and disposable medical devices for use in Trauma, ICU and Acute Surgery. As a highly-effective Director of Corporate Accounts, Mark and his team of 15 veteran national account reps worked hard and produced. But, with large territories, they were spread thin. They couldn't generate the degree of traction and momentum that Alsius needed to get to the next level. Alsius considered hiring another rep, but budgets were tight and sales cycles long. Something else was missing: a new approach.

That's when Mark ran into NCI's Jim Dausch. The two were at a GPO conference, and Jim stood out among the healthcare supply chain experts there. One high-level executive after another greeted Jim warmly and engaged in upbeat and yet serious conversation.

Before the conference was over, Mark and Jim met and talked. For Mark, it was a defining moment. Jim was clearly a top-rate connector. That was the missing link. Mark realized his team had been scrambling just to get to the right decision-makers. If the right doors had been opened for them, all their effort to date could have been focused on revenue-generating deals and key-account management: no missed opportunities and no missed earnings.

With the importance of relationships top-of-mind, Mark's next decision was easy: engage Jim and his firm rather than hire a new account rep. With Jim's connections and lock-step penetration plan, Alsius could optimize its breadth-of-coverage, depth-of-coverage, and speed-of-coverage in National Accounts.

Actions

Once engaged, Jim and the NCI team quickly began generating ROI to cover their consulting fees. First, Jim and Mark rolled up their sleeves and prioritized GPOs, IDNs, and RPCs according to their potential contribution to Alsius' revenue and earnings. Next, they evaluated Alsius' sales pipeline and the connections the Company needed most. Finally, they overlaid Jim's connections on Mark's marketing and sales strategies to prioritize targets. The result was a powerful hit list of key decision-makers.

Interestingly, the missing GPO decision-makers were at the regional versus national levels. While Mark and his hard-working crew had impressively secured six of the top seven GPOs, they'd not had the bandwidth to dig into regional affiliates with important volume-driving capabilities. Over a hundred affiliates were noteworthy. A few dozen of these were truly essential to maximizing the ROI on GPO contracts. These affiliates had their own marketing and sales teams. They also had strong relationships with targeted customers in their regions. If they believed in Alsius' products, they could offer up their own reps as trusted extensions of the Alsius sales team. This would increase the number of "feet on the street." In addition, the affiliates could deliver VIP contact information. With a VIP list, Mark would have all he needed to run high-impact marketing campaigns targeting the affiliates' member organizations.

Jim set up a series of meetings with top decision-makers in the targeted affiliate organizations. In planning every meeting, he'd ensure exactly the right people were involved, so any agreement reached would translate to immediate market influence. That gave Mark and his team the opening and the leverage they needed to close and manage critical volume-driving contracts.

Results

With NCI's expert help, Mark's door-opening and deal-closing campaign was a clear success. Alsius grew from $8 million to $14 million in just over a year and was quickly acquired.

Today, Mark reflects on his decision to bring Jim and NCI onboard. "I knew we'd made the right decision within a few weeks," he says. "Jim and I were at a GPO conference and he introduced me to a VP of Supply Chain at an organization we'd been targeting. Our efforts had stalled after months of sales contact. But Jim's intro prompted a conversation. That led to emails, phone calls, and a commitment to do business. This was the speed-to-revenue we were after!"

Now with another company, Mark has once again engaged NCI. "Jim and his team understand the healthcare industry," he explains. "They go way beyond just opening doors and performing in the obvious areas. They're our trusted business development partners: our eyes, ears, and advocates on the street."
